

is a surveillance tool managed by the California Department of Public Health which analyzes dead bird reports from watchful residents to the State's West Nile Virus Hotline. Clusters usually predict increased WNV activity in the area by several weeks, and serve as an early warning tool which mosquito control districts take very seriously.